Photographing selfies at Holocaust Memorials. Museums and memorials of the civil rights struggle. The tearing down of Confederate Monuments. Acknowledging leaders of Civil Rights that were once publicly ostracized. The creation of memorials to the history of lynching and massacres. How do we remember the past? How should we memorialize conflicting histories? How do we come to terms with past wrongs? The aim of this community dinner and presentation is to create a challenging dialogue about history and public memory, and a discussion on where societies need to move towards in relationship to these histories and realities.

This event is sponsored by the College Office of Diversity and Inclusion.
